Redress in the Financial Sector: Status quo

1. Context – Redress in India

Redress in India is –

- Distributed across traditional dispute resolution and ADR systems.
- Geographically diverse; 29 States and 7 Union Territories.
- Fragmented, multiple and hierarchical.
- Onerous.
- Inadequate in capacity.

1.1. State of redress in finance: Status-quo

- Fragmented: Multiple sectoral redress forums such as SEBI's Investor Protection Forum, IRDAI's Grievance Redressal Cell etc. Sectoral redress forum are divided per regulated entity such as RBI's Banking Ombudsman, RBI's NBFC Ombudsman, RBI Ombudsman for Digital Transactions.

- Onerous: Consumers are expected to submit written documents in prescribed forms with the Ombudsman.
- Inadequate: The existing redress system appears capacity constrained. For instance, despite the wide reach of NBFCs only 4 Ombudsman oversee their disputes.

1.2. State of redress in banking services: Issues

Reasons for non-maintainable complaints

1.3. State of redress in finance: Issues

- High pendency of disputes: Grievance redressal forums have high rates of pendency. For instance, close to 22% cases are pending before the Insurance Ombudsman for more than 1 year.
- High Turn-Around-Time (TAT): The time taken for grievances to be resolved are high between 4 months to a year, and sometimes even more.
- Inaccessibility of redressal forums: Redressal forums remain less accessible to consumers in rural regions. Most forums are located in urban areas.
- High rejection rates: Consumers face high rejection rates of complaints. For example, the Banking Ombudsman rejected 53% of the total complaints on grounds of non-maintainability. The insurance ombudsman rejected 74% of the complaints.
- Low grievance redressal capacity: Some grievance redressal forums lack adequate grievance redressal capacity due to low awareness, high vacancies et cetera.
- Opaque financial system and redress process: Consumers could find tracking the source of their grievances difficult. Further, they might also find identifying the right redress forums difficult.

Potential for ODR in the Financial Sector

2. Potential for ODR in the financial sector

ODR in financial sector can:

- Improve Accessibility: Reduced monetary, geographic and cognitive barriers to accessing grievance redressal.
- Simplify grievance redressal: Simplifying grievance redress procedures for consumers.
- Reduce TAT: Reduced time taken for registering grievances and redressing grievances.
- Increase Trust: Increasing trust in using formal financial services on account of having efficient grievance redressal procedures.
- Increase Transparency: Increased transparency in the grievance redressal process.

2.1. Opportunities for ODR

Objective of using ODR	Function performed by ODR	Relevant tools and practices
